The Most Romantic Restaurants in 10 San Diego Neighborhoods

By Darlene Horn | February 8, 2016

If the saying "the way to someone's heart is through their stomach" is one of your mottos, prove it this Valentine's Day weekend — or really, any time of the year — by visiting one of these romantic restaurants scattered throughout San Diego. We canvassed the county looking for great food served in intimate settings, going south to Imperial Beach and inland to cities like Escondido. And for this year's Valentine's Day, we're noting if these restaurants are serving a special menu for the holiday. Read on where to go this weekend and keep this list handy: these romantic hot spots have sex appeal all year long.

Escondido: Bellamy's

Escondido has its fair share of quality restaurants, and this gem in the heart of Downtown serves up traditional French food in a newly remodeled space you'll find very cozy — right down to the comfy seats. Attentive service paired with gorgeously plated food is a winning romantic combo any time of year. This Valentine's Day, splurge on the special dinner priced at $69 per person (there are oysters, a foie gras torchon, Maine lobster, veal chop and more to choose amongst) with an optional wine pairing for additional $30.
